Global Review: A Biannual Special Topics Journal alternates issues between the Humanities and Social Sciences with a focus on globalization, international relations, migration, world cultures & literatures, globalized economies, and other matters that move beyond a single national focus. Each peer-reviewed issue is guest-edited and relates to a single topic that explores the journal's international focus. By alternating between the Humanities and Social Sciences, the journal invites interdisciplinarity and intra-cultural thought within single topic-focused issues. Proposals from guest editors are welcome and are vetted by the journal's editorial board. Guest Editors then issue the CFP for specific topics and should plan on a minimum 16 month period between acceptance of the proposed special topics issue and its publication. Paper submissions should relate to special topics issues and be sent directly to the issue's Guest Editor.

The journal is published through Fairleigh Dickinson University, Vancouver, an institution defined by its international perspective and global education. As a reflection of this shared starting point, Global Review both critiques and prepares for an increasingly globalized world.

Submissions should adhere to a standard citation system, but submission for review need not adhere to a specific standard system. Global Review issues are typically published using Chicago Manual Style with footnotes. Articles should be between 6,000 to 10,000 words.
